Dear friends in Christ,

1 Corinthians 13:4-8a “⁴ Love is patient; love is kind; love is not envious or boastful or arrogant ⁵ or rude. It does not insist on its own way; it is not irritable or resentful; ⁶ it does not rejoice in wrongdoing, but rejoices in the truth. ⁷ It bears all things, believes all things, hopes all things, endures all things. ⁸ Love never ends.”

This month in Kids Bible Adventure the topic is “Love is...” It’s a look at the description of love found in 1st Corinthians 13. When the education team and I were looking over the topics we chose this one for February because of Valentines’ Day and the chance to look at the way God calls us to love. These very familiar verses are often used at weddings and they set quite a high bar. That is because this description of love is talking about the perfect way in which God loves us that we are called to emulate, not just with our spouse or family, but with all of God’s creation.

We do our best yet our broken nature prevents us from reaching that stage of perfect love. Instead, we struggle to love those others might consider unlovable... It is hard, then, to strive for this perfect love because sometimes we just don’t want to love others as Jesus loved us. It might be because we’ve been hurt, or because we are afraid, or simply because we don’t know how. The first thing I like to remind people is that you don’t have to like someone to love them. Meaning you don’t have to be good friends with someone in order to show them this love of God. I will be the first one to say that I struggle with this at times. I find the places where I feel the most powerful and declare unto any who can here, usually just my dog, that I will make this promise to love and to love fully. Yet, before a single day has ended, I’ve already fallen short.

I read an article the other day that talked about how Americans are really, really good at responding to acute suffering. We respond incredibly well to immediate suffering and need. If there is a natural disaster we respond quickly, if someone loses everything in a house fire, we are there with replacement items... But when it comes to longer term suffering and struggle we seem to lose our empathy and our response lowers dramatically. We are able to love easily when the emergency and the need is quick and apparent. Yet, when an illness, job loss, or recovery time, takes longer than whatever the timer in our heads says is appropriate, our empathy and love declines.

Imagine with me if God loved us that way. If the only time God came near was when we were in the most acute and immediate need. The rest of our lives would get lonely and we would feel despair pretty quickly. If Jesus told us that he died on the cross only to meet our immediate needs, we would be in poor shape indeed. Instead, God loves us through it all, through the immediate pain and struggles and through the weeks and months of pain when others pull back from us. I think of Job from Scripture and his friends. They came at the beginning when his pain was severe and he struggled hard, but when they came, all they did at first was sit in the silence with Job. There was a recognition that the pain could not be taken away, it simply had to be gone through, but they did not leave Job to get through it alone, even though there was nothing more than a mention in the foot notes of the Bible and of history.

We are called to model this love that extends beyond the borders we create, beyond the divisions we seek, and are called to love in the long difficult times when maybe the only thing for us to do is be present. To sit with the other person in their suffering and be the presence of God to that person. You are loved – go and do likewise!

Blessings,

February is not typically my favorite month in any of the northern parts of the country in which I have lived. Usually, February means that we have really hit “winter weather” with its full force of ice and bitter cold winds, and snow piled high. Though, I actually, don’t mind the snow so much—what I dislike about it, is the way in which February always seems grey to me. It feels dreary, almost as if even the sun has become saddened by the cold and the clouds, and so has decided to hibernate. Of course, the fact that I’m writing this on a grey, dreary day that is spritzing rain, and we’ve had a long slew of days like this, probably isn’t helping my fondness much. February is also usually the beginning of Lent—an important part of the Church year for sure, though the penitential mood of the season seems to contribute to the overcast weather.

But truth be told, the primary reason that I don’t care all that much for February is not because of any of this. It is because of Valentine’s Day. I have a hard time getting excited over the idea of a holiday like Valentine’s Day. Now, before you start thinking that I’m a Valentine’s Day Scrooge meandering through stores this month saying, “Bah humbug!” at every sign of hearts and frills and chocolates, I promise it’s not quite that bad, and I most certainly won’t turn down an offered box of chocolates. What I mean, though, is that I have felt as though we miss something when we make Valentine’s Day about making a grand act of declaration of our love. It seems like we pour a lot of time and effort into trying to make the day extra special, and setting aside this one day to show our love and appreciation feels underwhelming. I think it is because when we love someone, every day should be used to show our love. Every day presents countless opportunities to show we care in small, though no less important ways—maybe by putting the dishes away or taking out the garbage, or offering a hug after a bad day at school, or sitting with someone who is grieving. We can let people know that we love them, and they are special, without this one day. And yet, there is this one day to really do something special for those we love.

The more that I think about it, the more I realize that this is a little like the love that God offers us. Every day we are shown how much we are loved, though most often this happens in small ways—the colors of a sunrise, a phone call from a friend, the embrace of our partner after a long day at work, the laughter of a child. But then there is that one day every year where we are most reminded of how much God loves the world—Good Friday. And, maybe, we should really count it as two days every year when we remember God’s abounding love, because of course, Easter Sunday and the empty tomb are God’s grand act of love for creation. God doesn’t come to us with a card covered in red and pink hearts and frills and lace, but instead on a cross strained red, and in a sunrise more magnificent and glorious than ever before.

This is love. The love of a God who would sacrifice everything for all of creation. It is a new chance to truly appreciate the love that all have been offered. Perhaps it isn’t the sweets and candies of Valentine’s Day, but it is a truly astounding act of love. It is a love that we are all invited and called into sharing—not just with our loved ones and the people that we like, but to all people. God’s love is worth celebrating, every day. May your month be filled with many reminders that you are God’s, that you are loved, and that you are special in God’s eyes.

In Christ,
Pastor Kari

Ministry Update

Going to Campus

Classes have officially started at both Columbus State and Denison University. I'd like to share with you a highlight of my first couple weeks on campus and how God is clearly on the move!

I decided to do a free hot chocolate stand and had a sign-up sheet for Bible study at a table in the dining hall at Columbus State. I left the table to get more water for the hot chocolate and came back to Dominique (pictured above) signing up for Bible study, and she didn't even want hot chocolate. She told me that she really loves Jesus and was excited to see me doing this.

A couple days later we met up for coffee. She told me that she has been trying to do ministry on campus for the past couple of years and has been praying that someone would come along to help her. She told me that I was the answer to her prayers, and believe me, she is an answer to mine too.

Then, as we were talking at the coffee shop another student comes over and says, "Excuse me. Sorry to interrupt, but are you guys talking about Jesus?" Of course we answered with a resounding yes, and he joins in on our conversation. He is the drummer for the worship team at his church and has also seen the opportunity for ministry on Columbus State's campus. As the conversation continued, both of them said that they would be interested in leading Groups Investigating God, which are a space for Christians and their non-believing friends to uncover who Jesus really is.

God completely surpasses my expectations and was moving in the hearts of these students before I even stepped foot on campus. God is so good!

Funding Update

Sadly due to funding my hours are going to decrease. However, I will be able to be on campus regularly! Once I raise 100% of my part-time budget, my hours will increase. Although I wish I could be on campus doing ministry full-time, this will make campus ministry more sustainable in the long-run.

My first week of being on campus my funding percentage jumped from 42% to 49% thanks to some generous donors. And that was the week that I didn't spend any hours on fundraising. God really has showed up in miraculous ways through my funding, and I can't emphasize enough how thankful I am for all of your donations and prayers. I am now currently $180 away from getting my first pay-check!

To donate you can go to: <https://donate.intervarsity.org/donate#23011>

Prayer Requests

Pray for these two students from Columbus State as they prepare to lead Bible studies on campus for the first time this upcoming week.

Pray for student leaders at Denison as they plan outreach activities in hopes that their chapter will grow.

Pray that I am able to find a part-time job and that I am able to balance my time between being on campus, continuing to fundraise, and finding/working another job.

HEALTH MINISTRY NEWS

Greetings,

February 2020

This month's information is taken from a January Mayo Clinic Health Letter on Fibromyalgia.

Fibromyalgia is a term many people know, but much less common for people to understand. There is no one test to identify for sure someone has it because of the symptoms which can vary from person to person. It is a real, long term health condition that is being understood more fully as time goes on. The core symptom is widespread pain throughout much of the body at about the same level for at least three months with no other explanation. Fibromyalgia is now understood to be caused by changes in the central nervous system called "central sensitization", linked to many other pain disorders.

Central sensitization happens when sensor cells go on high alert and the brain starts to think ordinary sensations- such as light touch or digestive grumbles - are painful. With fibromyalgia, pain messages take over and drown out more pleasant sensations,

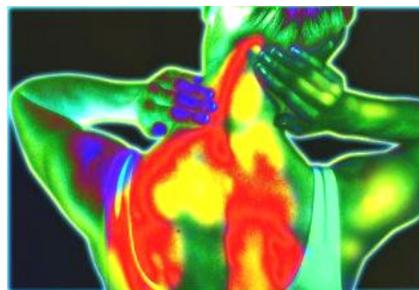

Cognitive Behavioral Therapy (CBT) is a most effective and most common way to manage fibromyalgia symptoms. It is a talk therapy that helps one develop cognitive skills to learn to challenge the negative thoughts and adopt a more realistic way to experience a way to deal with the pain. The "behavioral" part addresses the active part of living with this condition including how to gradually increase physical activity to 30 minutes of exercise most days. These exercises can eventually lessen the pain, ease depression, decrease fatigue, decrease stress and anxiety and help promote good sleep. Eating a diet that includes a variety of minimally processed foods, eating plenty of fresh fruits and vegetables, drink plenty of water and limit caffeine and alcohol consumption are also recommended.

There are several types of drugs that may be used but rarely recommended as the only treatment. Depending on the circumstances, use of one or more drugs can boost your mood, dial down the pain, and reduce fatigue.

If symptoms are severe and more structure would be helpful, talk with your physician about getting into a chronic pain rehabilitation program. These programs are interdisciplinary, a team of experts, to improve the quality of life and manage other symptoms.

If you or someone close to you has fibromyalgia, recognize more research is being done to help manage this condition. If you would like to read this article in its entirety, I do have it available just let me know,

Your Parish Nurse, Darlene Cook RN

Thank you

Thank you to all those of our St. Luke's family for their loving support, prayers & cards sent to me during my illness, including Pastor Robyn and my fellow Comforters who surprised me with one of their special blanket selections, which I use every day.

May God bless you all,

Evelyn Janick

The Comforters greatly appreciate Denzil Bell's God given talent for his wood working skills as he created an extension board for the ironing board we use to press our large fabrics to make our quilt blankets. Thank You, Denzil, and especially for fulfilling our wish so promptly.
